There are only 17,392,098 people set down in the census as being engaged in all occupations, only a little more than 331 per cent. of the total population. The remainder are dead heads. and directly dependent on this one third for a livelihood.

We will not plead that the word twenty in the above paragraph was a misprint for twelve but say that the correctness of our argument was not materially effected by such a mistake. There were, on the 1st of May, 1880, in JUST WHERE THE DEMOCRAT IS MISTA- induce their children, and their the United States, 3,837,112 people employed in manufactories, including mining and mechanical industries This is more than half the number employed in farming, and nearly twenty-five per cent. of all occupations, and it is rational to suppose that the number "directly dependent on such industries for a living" is proportionately as large. Since 1880 these industries have greatly increased in the South and West, especially in the latter section. Since that time Birmingham and Aniston have almost come into being, and other manufacturing towns have grown in an astonishing degree. Small factories have sprung up in every hamlet and mills of various kinds have been built off in the country where there is no town at all

Our argument in the article from which the above extract was taken, was that free trade would drive all these people now employed in the pursuits mentioned, into agriculture, and whether they are twenty or twelve millions strong, such an event would be truly alarming, since it would convert all of those consumers who now make the home market into competitive producers, and destroy the home market.

Now those who "incidentally derive their daily bread from such a source' are the merchants who sell these people their goods, the farmers who supply them with food and the professional men who give them their services. How many people of other vocations than manufacturing could live in Pittsburg if the manufactories of that city were removed? How many in Lowell? How many in Chattanooga? > Public Auction, Monday Sept. 3d 30 Jersey Cattle. The thoroughbreds consist of 9 cows and 6 heifers, all from the most noted butter pro (3216) the fine built that heads the herd, has commoned in his pedigece all the most noted strains that have tonde the Jersey family famous and has proved superior as a breeder. Also two fine pedigreed built coves. My cows were all selected for their handsome appearance and high merit in breeding and are perfect beauties. This is a rare opportunity for persons who wish to start fine Jersey herds. There is no investment equal to it, with the proper attention. Jersey cattle have advanced over 100 per cent. since I purchased my herd, and the same cattle could not be purchased in the breeding secication or on day of sale.
